Copyright Licence Life Science Industries

In the life science industries – where sharing scientific literature with colleagues, partners, regulators and advisers is critical – it's easy to breach copyright laws by inadvertently copying and sharing content without permission.

Most literary works are covered by copyright. If your employees copy and share text, tables, graphs or images that were created by others, they'll usually need permission from the copyright owner to do so. This includes content from:

- Journals
- Research databases and clinical papers
- Newspapers and magazines.

Our Annual Licences provide rights to undertake common internal, regulatory and medical information activities involving copies of literature. As we pay royalties to the creators whose works you reuse, you'll foster the creation of new content which will benefit your organisation in the future.

Copy and share global content

Specifically tailored to your industry, our Licence gives you the right to copy and share hard copy and digital content*, including:

- Key life science journals from publishers such as Elsevier, Wiley-Blackwell and Wolters Kluwer
- Newspapers and magazines from around the world
- Plus clinical and research papers, graphs, tables, market research data, competitive analysis and more.*

Your licence:

- Covers your entire organisation for internal use, providing copies to regulatory bodies or advisers and emailing articles to healthcare professionals on request. The Licence also includes limited external rights for Australian newspaper and magazines, and more.
- Saves you from having to negotiate licence fees with individual copyright owners. A single, cost-effective annual licence allows your employees to copy and share content from millions of sources.
- Allows reuse of Australian content. Not all international parent company licences cover Australian content.
- Provides real compliance. Relying on fair dealing and library exceptions leaves considerable copyright compliance gaps and gives a false sense of compliance.
- Reduces your risk of being brought into copyright dispute. Protect your reputation and avoid potential litigation expenses.

“We believe good science is vital to support the validity and efficacy of natural medicines. Doing good research requires that we have access to scientific information and that we can share this freely within the business. Being compliant with copyright legislation simply makes sense.”
